A FEAST, SIR, FOR EASTER!

Neither the Hat nor the Gloves, alone by themselves, will make a man feel or look as thrifty and "nifty" as he wants to on Easter Sunday, but they will help him surprisingly—and the help should be very welcome since it costs less to get the right kind here.

The Soft Hat with a narrower brim more closely rolled is particularly correct this Spring—we have it in all the most popular colors. Gloves that will reflect the good taste of the wearer are also waiting. And shirts, neckwear and hose. It's a feast, sir, for Easter!

AWARDS COMPENSATION IN MONTVILLE CASE

In the compensation case of Henry E. Guile of Montville, employee, and the Robertson Paper Company of Montville, employer, Compensation Commission No. 14 has awarded him his finding. From the testimony it is found that on the night of Dec. 20th, 1919, between 10 and 11 o'clock, the claimant was wheeling some ashes from the boiler room to the ash pile and was struck by an automobile which was proceeding along the highway without lights, receiving injuries to his right arm and bruises to the back. It is found that the injuries arose out of and in the course of his employment and on the premises of the respondent company in the town of Montville.

The evidence shows that the claimant has told several physicians about his injury but that none of them has advised any definite treatment. The respondent company has not paid him any compensation since the injury. It is also found that no physician has been directly consulted by the claimant as to his injury although he has at least at three different times been in a rather indirect way as to same.

The employee makes no claim for medical bills but states that he has been disabled for four weeks since his back up to March 15, 1920, on which day he resumed work.

After fully discussing the case it was finally agreed that claimant should receive four weeks' compensation which was accepted by the claimant and agreed to by the insurer.

Whereupon, it is hereby awarded, adjudged and decreed that the respondent-insurer shall forthwith pay to the claimant the sum of $32.20, which is compensation for four weeks' disability, and shall pay to constitute a full and complete settlement of the case.

PRESENTS COLLEGE NEED FOR $2,000,000

Connecticut College has the girls, 300 already in college, 130 more ready to enter in the next freshman class. Connecticut men and women must feel the need of a college of their own. The college is now in need of $2,000,000 for the endowment and maintenance fund, declared President Benjamin T. Marshall, the college president, at a meeting given at two o'clock Wednesday afternoon at the Mohican hotel in New London, when the plans for the effort to raise the $2,000,000 fund were announced.

President Marshall, the 300 students were awaiting anxiously the result of the luncheon, bridging the distance from the campus with thoughts that would translate their intense interest in the college into active and efficient aid as soon as they knew the plan was approved.

George S. Palmer of London, one of the trustees of the college, fired the meeting with an electric spark of enthusiasm, when near the close of the afternoon he spoke briefly but earnestly, declaring that he had come to consider his most vital thing in the remainder of his life. The only problem about the $2,000,000 fund, said Palmer, was how to bring Connecticut college at New London into touch with the people of large means in the state. That done, there can be no doubt that the college will be abundantly met for never have Connecticut people of wealth had incomes to equal what they have received during the past year.

Mrs. Palmer, who followed by the vote of the meeting endorsing the plan which had been presented by President Marshall, Rev. J. H. Selden of Norwich spoke briefly in advocacy of the plan. She said that she had taken, and with this business done the meeting adjourned at 4:45 o'clock.

The luncheon was held in the Dutch room with covers laid for fifty. On the wall behind the speaker's table was displayed the insignia of the campaign, a poster in black and white designed by Professor Henry Bill Selden, instructor in the art department.

Ever long, as the campaign progresses, this poster will become a familiar sight in every city in the state. Ex-Governor Simeon E. Baldwin of New Haven, one of the trustees of the college, presided at the gathering, briefly introducing the subject for which the friends of Connecticut College had been called together.

Mrs. Elizabeth Whit, burlesque, gave an interesting sketch of the inception of the college. Her sketch covered from the appointment of three members of the Hartford college to the trustees of the college, a committee to investigate the possibility of establishing a college for women in Connecticut to the opening of collections in the movement and answered questions regarding the work in Connecticut.

The meeting closed with a solo by Mrs. Pierce.

Dean Nye Shows the Opportunity

Dean Irene Nye effectively presented the wonderful opportunity that lies before the college and was given a spontaneous burst of applause for her stirring appeal. In part she said:

Our college opened in 1915 with the largest first year enrollment I believe that any college ever had. We had in February of this year as many promising candidates for next year's freshman class, as we did in the first year. That is my first point, we have the girls.

We believe that every woman as well as every man can probably do some kind of work superlatively well, and that it is our duty as citizens to the world that we find out what this work is and definitely and carefully prepare herself for it. It was this proposition that our college was designed to handle.

This double purpose to combine the opportunities of the best cultural college for women with those of the best institution for the training of women in a library or art school, a school of journalism or philanthropy, or of some other specific vocation. If this means that she must renounce a general college course in order to get a special vocational training by so doing she may be closing the door of the highest success to herself.

The founders of this college determined that there should have the chance to get all or at least a large share of her vocational training as a part of a general college course. That is why we have here in Connecticut a college that is a better place for a girl who has chosen her profession than a normal school, a school of dramatic art, a school of advanced solely to physical education, or to any other one vocation.

To give every girl an opportunity to cultivate her peculiar talent and to prepare for her individual life, while here, is the ideal of Connecticut college.

As our enrollment shows you we have the girls. As you see for yourselves, the girls are here and we have been trying to tell you we have the great idea. What more do we want? We want the money. We cannot get it through higher tuition fees. For the most part, we are not above our standard of admission on the size of a girl's brain and not on the size of her father's pocketbook. Educate the girls and every one is a leader and the able clerical class, the financial grades. The world needs help, the world needs sane and useful men and women. Connecticut college can increase the number of sane and useful women. As I have so many times reviewed in my own mind other advantages, I have said to myself, "If we had the money there is nothing we could not do." One man alone of great wealth who decided to devote that wealth to what is more precious than rubies could make our state of Connecticut the van of our nation in woman's education. I truly believe, that we are doing a different work and that you have it in your power to give this college a character that no college has ever had before—a character that as surely as it shall exist will make Connecticut colleges unique and shining among the colleges of the world.

Pres. Marshall Presents Finances.

Nearly 200 invitations had been sent to the luncheon, said President Marshall, but very few had been answered. Many influential friends of the college from attending, yet those who could not be there would be found in the effort in the state to come in a very helpful and efficient way. He expressed regrets that Treasurer William H. Reeves of New London was not able to attend because of illness, but that the treasurer had prepared a financial statement which President Marshall explained and made the text of his remarks.

He was asking, he said, that the college be given just the ordinary tax and convenience that it needs for the next five years as follows: Endowment for increased and adequate salaries—$1,000,000; Maintenance, buildings and equipment—Library, $150,000; chapel, $150,000; social science building, $100,000; dormitory, $200,000; two dormitories (50 students each), cost $125,000, $250,000; college hall, containing assembly hall, administration office, recreation room, etc., $200,000; balance of fund for general maintenance, $100,000; total $1,900,000.

Deficit This Year $11,000.

The total deficit of the college for the year 1919-20 will be over $11,000, it is estimated.

Sources of income:

1. Frodo students and faculty—$73,320.00

(a) Tuition $73,320.00

(b) Laboratory and other fees 4,580.00

(c) Residence 88,100.00

2. From endowment investments 44,547.10

3. Other income, rents and interest 2,000.00

Total $210,547.10

Costs:

(a) Educational: (1) Salaries for instruction $84,600.00

(2) Supplies and expense 2,500.00

(3) Books, equipment, and contracts 13,000.00

(4) Administration and general 19,000.00

2. Business administration and expense 3,000.00

3. Operation and maintenance of physical plant, including refectory and infirmary 104,880.00

4. Other expenditures 14,700.00

Total $221,780.00

Deficit 11,232.90

For each student President Marshall said the total cost to the college is $70.84, towards which a tuition fee of $215 has been charged, making an excess of $255.16 in excess of the cost of the college.

He read letters from the trustees of Smith college, Radcliffe and Vassar, answering in the affirmative the two questions is Connecticut college needed. He said that the trustees of Smith college, Radcliffe and Vassar, answering in the affirmative the two questions is Connecticut college needed.

The plan of the effort to attain the $2,000,000 fund, he explained, embraced a general chairman from among the trustees of the college, a faculty committee and a student committee, county committees and a general committee of men, whose field would only be limited by the universe. The county committees are to learn of prospective donors. New London and Windham counties would be combined. Middlesex and Tolland placed together, but the other counties of the state would have their own committees. We are in the state with it till it is done, declared President Marshall in closing.

People Have the Money.

Rev. J. Beveridge Lee suggested that Trustee George S. Palmer make the motion endorsing the plan, but Mr. Palmer thought some one other than a trustee had better do that. He went on to speak with fervor of his great interest in seeing Connecticut college supported and said that he would be an abiding interest for the rest of his life. To get this $2,000,000 we need to realize how much can be collected by how little in money. The state of Connecticut has never been so prosperous, the profits of its industries in the past year and in the present year have never been exceeded in its history. In spite of taxes the net incomes remain large. Men of wealth are larger than ever before. One per cent. of that income would answer the call of the college for support. It is merely the question of getting people of means into touch with the wonderful work that the college is doing. Never so much as now is the need of education so apparent for we have within our state an alien population for whom our only hope is to educate these into a right conception of what American standards for us must give education to those who control the future and that is the women. The education of women is the most important part of the work ahead of us.

Mr. Palmer was warmly applauded and the meeting adjourned after endorsing the plan proposed by President Marshall.

The guests at the banquet were:

Hon. Simeon E. Baldwin, LL.D., of New Haven; Frank Valentine Chapman, New London; Colin S. Buel, M.A., New London; Miss Louise Howe, Norwich; Hon. J. H. Selden, New London; Dean Irene Nye, Miss Orle Sherer, Dr. H. Z. Kip, instructor in German; Prof. J. E.
